

The story of a coffee bean

Once upon a time a coffee bean began to grow in a hot country called Kenya.

One day a girl called Anya came along and picked the coffee bean. She put it in a basket with hundreds of other coffee beans.

The beans were tipped into a large drying rack and lay in the sunshine. They turned green in colour.

The beans travelled to the United Kingdom on a ship, then in a lorry.

A man came along and bought some beans. He put them into a hot machine where they turned brown. They had been roasted. Some beans were sent to a grinding machine.

The coffee was sold to shop and cafe owners for them to sell to their customers.

The coffee was drunk by grown-ups.